Published March 29, 2010 - 12:34 am Just curious how many? I ordered 3 but there was even more in stock after I ordered. :( Published March 29, 2010 - 12:47 Don't ask me me but I booked 2 times from Gamestop and both times they cancelled my bookings. The first time because I was shipping to my work address and not my billing address (I live in a hood. Only a fool has things sent to your house so UPS can leave it on your doorstep.) The second time (I added my work address to my credit card acct), they called and wanted me to check my order for some reason. Я сделал, давая им адрес, и т.д., и т.д. и т.п. и т.п. Затем в ту же ночь я получил письмо о том, что мой заказ будет отменен, если я связался с ними, чтобы проверить мой заказ, но что я должен игнорировать электронную почту, если я уже сделал это. Two weeks went on w/o order, so I pulled up my order information and of course they canceled it even though I had already checked all my information. So I never order from them again. Published March 29, 2010 - 01:30, what game was? Published March 29, 2010 - 06:45 So what game was? The more you avoid this issue, the more I think GS was justified in cancelling your order. Published March 29, 2010 - 04:55 PM So what game was? I really don't understand why it's important. Once he posts the game, GS is going to go OOS and then eBay prices will fall because the stupid hoarders who are hiding CAG are going to sell the game only to make $1 on it when they could easily sell it and make $10. Keep the game a secret OP. If people really want to know, how about they research the price/cost of the game? If this had happened to my GOW3 I had bought the other day. Needless to say, I was a little annoyed, but that's all that. Hey, I was wondering, how can I cancel the order I made as a guest? I tried to look for the cancellation button somewhere, but I couldn't find one. Intended for you to post this in a game. Oh. / When someone chooses to buy or pre-order something from a GameStop website, they have the option to use a GameStop account or check as a guest. However, you should never check in as a guest if there is a 1% chance that you can't hold on to the order. Why? When you make an order as a guest, you can't cancel it without customer support. However, you should just remove the last 3 words from this last sentence because GameStop customer support won't help you. So if you use a guest check out quickly pre-order something like the Fire Emblem Fates Special Edition, avoid and resist it as if it were the death itself. For months, I've been at war with GameStop customer support. Whether it's waiting for an hour for phone calls that don't yield any results or email chains that suddenly stop the moment the issue can be resolved, GameStop will do its best to avoid your So long... Oh, the order has been sent! When Solaire amiibo was announced, I decided to pre-order it because 1) Dark Souls for switch looked pretty cool and 2) is a neat amiibo idea. However, when the game was postponed, I decided to give up my pre-order on game, and decided to cancel amiibo because it was not needed anymore. But GameStop will make it impossible. In order to cancel, I just had to call them or email them. Easy enough! Or so I thought. Calling GameStop would be impossible because I would immediately be on hold for more than an hour, and even when I spoke to a representative of the conflict somehow did not get resolved. When I am sent an email, customer representatives will request information related to the order or myself and then immediately stop responding. It was like GameStop was doing its best to avoid cancelling the order and it lasted for months. The last time they even told me: The order was cancelled, you're good to go, and then all of a sudden I noticed that I was charged. I was very angry at the moment, but it was still almost a week before the product would even be shipped, so I thought it might finally take care. No. No matter how I tried to contact GameStop, they just ignored me. Although the order is still classified as open. Only after the item is sent they have the audacity to reply and send me a reply. The answer that stated that they would be happy to exchange it in the store, but I would only get the item price back, not the cost of delivery. Honestly, fuck GameStop. I can't wait for them to go out of business and I hope that all the good people affected by this kind of thing will find a job in a more enjoyable company. knock over their magazine racks to dispute it with your credit card and download all the emails and stuff you sent them. I did some deductive reasoning and came to the decision: don't buy anything from Gamestop anymore. I thought it was going to be about all the add-on shit they try to sell you every time you buy something. I only go there if I have games that I want to offload, or for holiday sales. No. I have Gamestop next to me and the guys there are cold. I also like their massive bonus money when the new console comes out as I sell all the crap I have and don't touch and pay off the new console plus other crap. I've never found Gamestop prices to be competitive ever. Having always found better deals elsewhere I mean just taking it back to the store when it delivers. Why did you write a crappy clickbait title and make a bunch of assumptions about GameStop practice solely based on one experience that only you had? Even your strange decision not to use guest checkout is not supported in any way by your own history unless you are leaving important details. They shouldn't ignore you, but the way their system is configured you might get to undo it. They have to reimburse you if they can't do anything. I've never found Gamestop prices to be competitive ever. Always find the best deals elsewhere Best buy probably probably has a better member program, but so many people including Gamestop and Better Buy are slowly deploying these programs. I guess because they weren't profitable. So now I'm just buying new games. Rarely do I get used to games. And they are the easiest and most convenient place to unload old game stuff for me. I've never found Gamestop prices to be competitive ever. Always finding the best deals elsewhere gamestop prices is always amazing when they are gradually giving up the console. I've expanded the ps3, Xbox 360, Vita, DS and Wii collections to a fraction of what it would have cost otherwise. Why did you write a crappy clickbait title and make a bunch of assumptions about GameStop practice solely based on one experience that only you had? Even your strange decision not to use guest checkout is not supported in any way by your own history unless you are leaving important details. Reread the topic and try again. Since you seem to be on good terms with your local store, talk to the manager and maybe get a gift card or coupon or something. I try to avoid shopping there as much as possible because of things like this. Their phone support takes about an hour to pick up and then spends 6 seconds telling you they can't help. If you can't wait for the item ships to then come back, then what I would do is call your bank and let them know about everything as much evidence and documents that you can if possible. Most recently I tried to pre-order a playstation classic from them because I had an old gift card and I couldn't because my father also ordered one, except that he cancelled his order because he put the wrong information and couldn't change it. The last edited: December 17, 2018 TC!t; I understand that this is a stressful situation. But I think you can at least go to any GS and return it after you get it. And explain the problem. I doubt they'll refuse to return. Heck, in my younger days I willingly purchased a PS2 game called SOCOM 2. and got themo drive from behind the counter by accident, even with it opened, I was able to return it for my money back. Funny, I pre-ordered RDR2 in store pick, online without paying a penny, and I'll pay it when I go on Thursday. I understand that it is difficult, but it is not the end of the situation. And can still be fixed in your favor I've never found Gamestop prices to be competitive ever. Always found the best deals elsewhere Their vintage game prices tend to be competitive. This is usually according to ebay prices only for the game, and since the condition from GameStop is largely random, I got some complete with case and at these prices. I can only think of one game I got that didn't work, but even if it does, they have a blanket 7 day return policy on pre-production. All that current, although very rarely competitively priced I went to the gamestop a few weeks ago visibly stoned and bought two used PS4 games. I Am I my eyes are glued to the CC kiosk for the entire transaction, and the cashier applied two previously owned gamestop purchase guarantees, taking a total of about $6 above about a millisecond before tapping the kiosk screen on the next display where you insert/swipe the card. I looked at him and asked him: Please remove them, and he became like, physically afraid of me. His hands started shaking out ... I don't know what, and I just left the store with my game... felt just a wee bit disturbed and probably never going there again, and it comes from someone who has spent many years rather half-heartedly sticking out for GS and claiming they weren't COMPLETELY evil. I mentioned being stoned because I thought that maybe he saw the condition I was in and thought he might get it unnoticed? I've never done this to me before... trifle in the grand scheme, but it's still monumentally crappy. it breaks my heart to think of low-income/non-gaming enthusiast clients they probably regularly do it yes that's pretty shitty. I've never had anything like it. It seems usually the employee wants to ask these questions as much as I want to hear them, so I sympathize with them. They're talking. People are fired/downgraded at all levels based on bad numbers, and guarantees are considered the best type to get because most people will never use them. Edit: Also, you can get dismissed/downgraded by not asking these questions so like it. Be kind to the employees who ask these annoying questions - their work literally depends on it in some cases. It's shitty, it's not really for them to sell these warranties. I'm always good to people when they ask me these questions no matter where I shop. I know it's corporate policy and they're just trying to do their job. It's anecdotal from a long time ago, but I remember ordering the Octopath Traveler diorama thing from GS as a guest and being to cancel it a few days after realizing that I'm dumb and didn't need a diorama. I didn't have much trouble. It's shitty, it's not really for them to sell these warranties. I'm always good to people when they ask me these questions no matter where I shop. I know it's corporate policy and they're just trying to do their job. Oh, I didn't mean you were unkind if he got out of this way! Just a more general statement, please be kind they are doing their best to keep their job and still help you. And yes. The numbers crunch really suck. If an employee typically spends more time setting up a store and overall tasks instead of focusing on sales, he receives warnings. Gamestop just assumes that you can do it all with continuously cut hours. Just return it and eat $6. Your time spent writing this post costs more than $6. It really is great thing man. I've found it for the best not to deal with customer service and return everything you don't want to shop for a refund. Gamestop is as horrible a retail experience as it can get. One of the few times I'm looking forward to the company going It's only a matter of time. Guest departures are usually a mess in general. Usually try to avoid it. Had a few problems even with PetSmart. Departure of guests usually led to the absence of orders, their cancellation and impossible. However, created an account and no problems since then. XD Make a refund. You haven't gotten anything from them and you don't want to do business with them ever again. Burn bridges with them. Chargeback chargeback chargeback I've been a member for over a year (thanks to GS glitchfest 2017)... and its hell for members too lol probably one of the worst retail websites I've ever used. LOL Sometimes their customer service can take 1 hour They managed to fuck up the release day delivery on the console. Gamestop's support is terrible. Never worry using the written ticket option because you will never get an answer. I feel that if you explain the situation to the manager of your local store, they will help you somehow. Return your items to the store and just explain that you could never cancel the order because of the support line time and you are going through this hassle for months and ask them to see if they can make a refund on the delivery too. My store manager always did these things for the guest because he knew it was better to bend the rules to have the guest be happy than to pee them and not come back. I would make the charge back. I read it all. Twice. I don't know what I'm missing. It's a broad statement based only on your experience, but you imagine it as not doing it, or you'll get over!, not only does this thing happen to me and it sucks. It's ok to ventilate, but don't turn it into more than it is. I read it all. Twice. I don't know what I'm missing. They don't need you to protect them on ResetEra, buddy. I have never had a problem cancelling the order that I posted as a guest on their website. One letter is all you need. I've signed up for some of these things, especially when I have to spend a little time and money there, but I can't be super nice every time they ask. Its a moot point anyway, as I could visit the gamestop 6 times or less a year at the moment. The whole enterprise goes right downhill, as half of the store was filled with the worst kind of geek and nerd garbage collector. Damn garbage, every one of the items they had. Besides the annoying issues, the workers are good a lot and they suggest using PS3 games. Page 2 User Banned (1 Week): Personal attack and sexist insults towards another member I just warn people that ordering something as a guest from GameStop is bad based on my experience. They are (not) corporations. They don't need you to protect them on ResetEra, buddy. Don't be a bitch. He's right. It's nice to know that Gamestop still sucks after I've stopped patronizing them completely. Talk to your trust card company. You will most likely win the case and you will get the items for free. Just do not abuse this power, use it only for such cases. I'll buy Solaire amiibo and pay $6 for shipping if it makes you feel better. Everything is digital to me. Death to gamestop. I feel I'm an OP game here in the UK making it difficult to cancel a pre-order as they have removed the option to cancel it manually and you should contact their customer service. Just return it and eat $6. Your time spent writing this post costs more than $6. It really isn't a big deal man. Why should the OP have a cost when the OP is told that the order has been cancelled only to find out that it is not. Gamestop messed up and the OP is entitled to all the money back. This is a funny reason I like WELL ordered this day they allowed to pre-order and use guest checkout, it was back in March and I used PayPal so the charge just sat in PayPal forever and I realized the ID just let me sit and I got my confirmation delivery last week and got my Solaire amiibo today! ID say keep it man and just sell it on ebay and get 6 bucks back and more they're going for a 40 minimum right now and if you paid the same as I was 22 bucks in total. Like Amazon, if you return something for reasons other than the product doesn't work. But I know Gamestop sucks. How stupid I could be. Amazon lets you actually cancel pre-orders though. This is understandable in this case; it happened because GameStop customer service wouldn't cancel my booking for me as leaving as a guest prevents me from doing so without their participation. I contacted PayPal about this yesterday and showed them the evidence. They agreed that GameStop acted in bad faith and issued me a refund today, so that was resolved very quickly. I never order anything from GameStop again though and encourage others to do the same. I actually had a similar experience! Except for the opposite. I booked Solaire Amiibo months ago as a guest. My credit card number was stolen between then and I got a new card. Basically they sent me a letter saying they had cancelled the order. I had no idea what it was, and had to figure it out myself. He also said that I should try reordering, but also that reordering was impossible because it was sold out. Contacted customer service 3 times and they just repeated the same incompatible messages over and over again. So I wanted amiibo, but couldn't get it, haha! I avoid shopping on GameStop when I can. I went to the gamestop a few weeks ago visibly stoned and bought two used PS4 games.
