Visa hela texten Geraldine Woods English Grammar is not a secret, it is a set of traditions and patterns of language that have been rendered over the centuries. With a little practice, you can learn the rules of standard English, so you can express yourself confidently and correctly. Pronouns are convenient words that replace the names of people, places and things. Be sure to give each pro birth, proper work. Here's what you need to know about pronouns: A special subject's pronoun (when one person or thing does action or exists in a state of being): I, you, him, she, who, who. Multiple pronouns (when more than one person or things do action or exist in a state of being): we, you, them, who, who. A special pronoun of an object (one person or a thing, get action): me, you, it, it, who, who. Multiple object pronouns one person or thing, get the action): we, you, them, who, who. Singular possessive pronouns of pronoun property for one person or a thing): mine, mine, yours, yours, his, her, her, whom. Multiple possessive pronouns (showing ownership of more than one person or things): ours, ours, yours, yours, theirs, their own, whose. In English grammar, verbs change in form to tell the period of time, or tense. You use different verbs to indicate whether the action has already occurred, is now happening, will happen in the future, and several different variations. Remember these times: Present: happening now (I say, he says, they say) The real progressive: in the process going (I say, he says they say) Past: happened so far (I spoke, he spoke, they spoke) Past progressive: happened over a period of time so far (I spoke, he spoke, they spoke) Future : will happen after the present (I will speak) , he will say, they will speak) The future is progressive: happen over a period of time, after the present (I will speak, he will speak, they will speak) The present is perfect: started in the past and continues now (I spoke, he spoke, they spoke) The past is perfect : happened in the past before another event in the past (I said, he spoke, they said) The future will happen perfectly: in the future before the deadline (I will say To write the full sentence, applying the proper rule of English grammar, you have to use several different points. Make sure your suggestions have all these elements: The theme of the verb is a couple: verb do or be a word. Someone or something has to make an action or exist in a state of being. That's the theme. Each complete sentence requires at least one pair of verbs. End of punctuation: Each sentence ends with a punctuation mark. The statement ends with a complete stop, a question mark and a strong statement with an exclamation point. Full thought: The proposal should include one complete idea. In English grammar, you need to know when to capitalize on words. Sometimes a part of a sentence is a large letter or someone's name (the right nouns) is simply specified. Use capital letters for the following: Specific names: Capital letters are used for the names of people, places and brands. (Bill, Mrs. Jones, River Dee, Burberry). Lower letters for common names (girls, mountains, clothes). First word: The first word in a sentence, title or subtitle is always capitalized. Personal pronoun: the pronoun I am referring to a speaker or writer should be capitalized. Names of full-length literary works: The first word in the title of a book, piece, newspaper or magazine, as well as all important words, must be (God, highway queen, Times, Tale of two cities). If you have a subtitle, capitalize only on the first word, the word, names, and personal pronoun I. Names of songs, poems and articles: Capitalization of the first word, correct names, and personal pronoun I. Names for people: When the name comes before the name, capitalize it (The Reverend Ames). After the name, capitalize the titles only when they belong to very important positions (Prime Minister, Secretary-General of the United Nations).
