Because of the underrepresentation of racial and ethnic minorities in general internist research, their patients are less likely to receive specialized care from general internists and more likely to have missed or delayed needed care. However, when racial and ethnic minorities receive specialized care for cardiovascular disease, patients often fare worse than the majority white population. One reason may be that these minority patients are less likely to seek specialized care, perhaps because they experience greater mistrust of the healthcare system. Thus, to address these issues, we need to understand barriers to care and the motivation and ability of racially and ethnic minority patients to engage in preventive care. This R34 proposal, "Engaging Racial and Ethnic Minority Patients in Heart Disease Self-Management Education (E2M2HD)," will examine the impact of a tailored intervention on care engagement among patients with heart disease. We will assess whether patients who receive a self-management education intervention differ from those who do not on measures of health literacy, socio-economic status, and self-efficacy. We will also assess whether health literacy, self-efficacy, and socio-economic status moderate the effect of the intervention on care engagement. Finally, we will examine the effect of the intervention on patient-reported outcomes, including access to care, knowledge and skills needed to manage heart disease, and trust in the healthcare system. Using a randomized design, we will enroll 200 racial and ethnic minority patients with heart disease and assess patient-level outcomes at baseline, post- intervention, and 6 months post
