Students move from whole number to multiplication and decimal, again using location values as a guide for purposes and performing estimates on their products. Multiplication is explored as a method of expressing equivalent measurements in both whole numbers and decimal shapes. A similar sequence for division starts concretely with disk numbers as an introduction to division and multi-digit division and leads students to divide multi-digit whole numbers and decimal dividends by two divided digits using a vertical write method. In addition, students evaluate and write expressions, register their calculations by using the associative property and brackets. Student applies the work of the module to solve multi-step word problems using multi-digit multiplication and division and the unknown representing either the group size or number of groups. An emphasis on the reasonable of both product and quotations, interpretation of stays and reasoning on the placement of decimal tracing on learning skills throughout the module, including sophistication knowledge of location, rounding, and estimation.
