WARNING: There are two model 7 pressure cannulas. Parts are available for Model 7 cans with a hole located in the center of the cover. Parts are not available for the second model. Someone gave me a caniah that looks really old. It is a National Pressure Cooker Co. No 7. I have no idea where to buy parts. What looks like a vent tube can unscrew in two places (at the top & bottom, revealing a spring). Does it have holes in the body and a square hole at the top that I assume will continue the counter-balance? What looks like a pressure valve has no rubber material I can see. Is that something I can buy parts for? Does anyone have a picture and/or operating instructions to see the original parts that were on it & compare? Does anyone know when it dates back to? If you have the old national pressure canner No. 7 and are looking for replacement seals, gauges, weights (trembles), etc., here's the good news; Reviewers on large sales websites whose name begins with Amaz (they say we can't say their name...), say that these seals and gauges match the old national No. pressure canner - pressure cup Notes about the old national pressure mug/cannars and Presto National Presto Industries, Inc. Inc. it was founded in 1905 in Eau Claire, Wisconsin under the name Northwestern Steel and Iron Works, which made pressure cannons (then called canner retorts) for commercial cannars. It was 50 gallons and later 30 gallon pressure canons. The company installed an aluminum foundry in 1915 for the specific purpose of producing large pressure canisters (1900 gallons) for domestic use. Since 1917 they have been producing stove/canner No. 7. In 1925, the name of the company changed to National Pressure Cooker Company. And then the company changed its names again, and in 1939 it became Presto. Pressure HRT Presto was presented at the World Trade Fair in New York in 1939. So when the canary says Old National on it, you know it's older than 1940. The good news is that they were very well built and you may need to replace the seal and overpressure safety valve Of course you will need to replace the handles and other parts. And have the pressure gauge tested or simply replaced. If you have further questions, you can contact Presto here . Check out our page on annual pressure canner maintenance tips and pressure canner buyer guides. Pressure cookers and © Presto Presto were redesigned and redesigned in 1978. They added new features, including a locking system that prevented the cover from opening when there was pressure in the unit. Timeline of the summary of names on cannars 1917 - 1939 - National and Old National 1939 - 1978 - Presto 1978 - Presto, with redesigned models - See this page for the main list of Presto model numbers, sizes and spare parts numbers. It can also be engraved in a saucepan under the handle of the body. If it is a very old model, the number can probably be found on the label attached to the top of the envelope. Old units have model numbers like 40, 50, 204, 603, etc. Newer models usually start at 01/ or 02 / followed by letters like PA or PC and multiple letters and /or numbers. The latest styles always have seven-digit (all numeric) model numbers starting with 01 or 02 (Example: 0136001). Note - All Pressure cookers Presto have the number 409A stamped on the underside of the stove, this is not a model number. This is the number used to mark the product list by Underwriters Laboratories (UL). Click on the Presto pressure mug model number for the parts list. If you are looking for instructions for a specific pressure cooker, click on the model number and the instructions will be provided with other spare parts for your cooker.
