Form of Things Courtesy production by Neil LaBute's Play Shape of Things will be given live reading on Friday night for the Actors Foundation, with LaBute himself taking part in the after-show WA to tell a few war stories about the show. The 2001 play premiered in London, was later revived on Broadway and adapted in 2003 as a film starring Paul Rudd and Rachel Weisz. The cast is for the benefit of reading Tony winner Lena Hall (Hedwig and Angry Inch), Tim Realbuto (Yes), Jonah Platt (Wicked) and Katie Rose Clark (Miss Saigon). Speaking from their homes across the country, Realbuto will play Adam, a social loser who works at the museum, and Hall will play Evelyn, a passionate and outspoken art student. As Evelyn changes Adam for Best, his two best friends Philip (Platt) and Jenny (Clark) begin to wonder if Evelyn is a good influence or their friend's fall. As four young students are emotionally and romantically connected to each other, a web of lies, love and betrayal unfolds in the name of art. Alison Tanney, who runs the theater enthusiast podcast, will produce and direct the benefits of the event. Neil LaBute REX/Shutterstock LaBute, whose other plays include, among other things, reasons to be pretty and Fat Pig and TV and movie scripts including Van Helsing and in the company of men, will join the cast in the post-show WA moderated by Tanni. The ad says the playwright is looking forward to watching this new production, providing background context, and telling a few war stories about the show. Virtual reading starts at 19:00 ET on Friday, May 8 and can be viewed in TheShapeOfThingsActorsFund.com. The live broadcast is free, with a $5 donation to the Actors Foundation offered. Donations can be made to the Actors Fund and its efforts to assist entertainment industry workers during the COVID-19 pandemic www.actorsfund.org/TheShapeOfThings. Premiered at the Almeida Theatre in London in 2001 with Paul Rudd as Adam, Rachel Weisz as Evelyn, Gretchen Mole as Jenny, and Fred Weller as Philip. Director was LaBute himself. By Po Po instructions of the author, it must be performed without an interval or curtain call. The central themes in Form of Things are devoted to the nature of stoicism, art, psychopathy, intimacy, research of love and the willingness of people to do something for love. It is located on a small campus in the American Midwest and focuses on the lives of four young students who become emotionally and romantically connected to each other. In 2003, he was filmed with an original cast. Plot When nerdy Adam Sorenson (Paul Rudd), an English literature major of mercy, a fictitious Midwestern college, meets Evelyn Ann Thompson (Rachel Weisz), an attractive graduate student of art, at the local museum where he works, his life takes an unexpected turn. Never having the best success with women, he is flattered when Evelyn shows interest in him and, at the suggestion of Evelyn, gets a new hairstyle, starts a regular exercise regimen, eats healthy food, dresses more stylishly, acts more confident and dominant, and begins to wear contact lenses instead of his usual glasses. These initial changes regarding Adam's appearance are well received by Adam's friend, Philip (Frederick Weller), and Phillip's fiancée, Jenny (Gretchen Mole). Jenny takes such sympathy for Adam's new physique that she takes a step on Adam and the two share a passionate kiss. It remains unclear whether Adam and Jenny have sex. Later Evelyn persuades Adam to undergo plastic surgery to fix his deformed nose and manages to convince him to cut himself off from Philip and Jenny, whose relationship she destroys. Eventually, Adam learns that he was part of Evelyn's MFA dissertation project, a topic often mentioned in the conversation but never fully explained. Evelyn presents Adam's audience of students and faculty as her creation, announcing that she has been instructed to change the world by her graduate counselor, but that she has decided to change someone else's world instead. Her work consisted of Adam's sculpture as a more attractive person. Accordingly, none of the feelings she had shown to him throughout the film were genuine; at no stage in their relationship did she fall in love with him; her videotapes of their love are just part of the documentation of the project. She also announces that she is not going to marry him and the engagement ring he offered her is just one of the exhibits of her art installation. Capper in My Time in Mercy. Publicly humiliated and emotionally devastated, Adam confronts Evelyn in the gallery (since no one has appeared in WA since then), demanding an explanation for his actions. In response, she says that he should be grateful to her, claiming that, objectively speaking, she has a positive impact on his life, making him a more attractive and interesting person in the eyes of society. He's calling, heartless joke, not art, and asks for the ring back, as it was with his grandmother. Evelyn agrees. He asks her if everything you told me about yourself was true, and she tells him that she whispered in his ear the night they had sex on tape was true. Evelyn leaves Adam alone in the gallery. He goes to the TV and pushes Play, as can be seen when the two of them were in bed, playing love. In tears, he watches it over and over again. Starring Paul Rudd as Adam Sorenson as Rachel Weisz as Evelyn Ann Thompson Gretchen Mole. As Jenny Frederick Weller notes, the play has been reprised several times with new actors: under the direction of Brian Reinhart at the Bernie West Theatre in New York, a quote is needed in January 2011 at the Soho Gallery, in London, on Charing Cross Road with Tom Attenborough, the director of Traditionally, the characters are called Adam and Evelyn (a reference to the history of Eden Gardens), but if the production can wish for a gender-related reversal, but if the production might wish for a gender-related reversal, amy might want to be The publication of Form of Things is published in the acting edition of Broadway Play Publishing Inc.
