It will also introduce new and revamped emojis that show women doing stereotypical men's jobs such as detectives, construction workers, and police officers, CNN reported. There are new female athletes, pride flags, and family choices for single parents. The exchange of water weapons is not Apple's first foray into cartoon gun control. Earlier this year the governing body in charge of the nixed emoji gun emoji was proposed. It was one of a number of possibilities new, but members of Apple's Unicode Consortium and Microsoft are arguing against Olympic-inspired weapons, according to Buzzfeed.Pistols and other gun emojis have landed people in trouble with the law. A 12-year-old boy in Virginia Virginia charged after allegedly threatening his school in an Instagram post using a gun, knife and bomb emoji. A teenager in Brooklyn has been arrested for posting a police emoji with a gun emoji pointing at his head. The charges were later dropped. A French court ruled a gun emoji could be a death threat, sentencing a man to three months in prison for sending a gun to his ex-girlfriend. Last year, an organization called New Yorkers Against Gun Violence (NYAGV) started a campaign to get Apple to replace its version of the gun emoji. It launched the site, disarmtheiphone.com, and sent an open letter to remove the firearm emoji as a symbolic gesture to limit gun accessibility. Apple has stood up to the NRA's industry bullying tactics and weapons by showing that there are more life-affirming ways to express themselves than with a gun, said Leah Barrett, Executive Director of NYAGV. Apple will release iOS 10 this fall. Anyone who wants to talk about water pistols toting female surfers waving pride flags can download the iOS 10 public beta now, the report said. What's New - Optimization My Rating App Store Rating August 2, 2016zamayo.com/apple-gun-emoji-water-pistol9to5Mac: iOS 10 includes more than 100 new emoji in total with new female gender options for athletes and professionals, new family characters, and the most popular emoji redesigns. Apple is working with the Unicode Consortium to ensure a representation of diversity across emoji. In iOS 10, Apple adds new women's emojis for runners, cyclists, swimmers, builders and more. There is also a new rainbow flag (assumed to represent LGBTQ Pride), and a gun emoji is now described as water toys. In Unicode standards, this character is defined as a 'gun'. Emojipedia's definition describes emoji as a weapon that has the potential to pose a great danger. With previous versions of iOS, Apple presents this emoji as an actual gunmetal gun. With iOS 10, they have It's for the green toy water pistol. I don't like how they've handled this. This has nothing to do with the associated political implications of free speech and everything that apple plans with the way it applies this technically. My personal qualm is that Apple has distorted the integrity of the Emoji language by replacing glyphs for characters that have very different meanings. Toy water pistols describe intentions very differently from real pistols. Emoji 🏹 now have an ambiguous meaning because they represent different objects across devices and operating systems. On iOS 10 devices, the emoji in the previous paragraph look like a water pistol. In iOS 9 or on OS X My Mac El Capitan (where I typed this post) looks like a serious weapon - a gun. By the way, VoiceOver will describe that character as a 'gun' on all devices, including iOS 10. I try to point out a more sinister example on Twitter where the meaning of a message can now be misinterpreted if the recipient and sender are not using the same OS. Instead of recycling the same point of character code, this is what I think Apple should do. Remove the gun emoji from the Apple keyboard completely. The Unicode consortium lobbies to add a new emoji depicting a 'toy water pistol' and include it in the keyboard. This treatment is better because it does not affect the use of gun emoji in other clients, Apple will only disable the ability to write it on its system. The water pistol emoji will then be true to itself with its unique code, consistent depiction of a toy water pistol across all platforms that support the latest Unicode standards and correct labeling for VoiceOver accessibility. Assuming Apple follows my advice, there are still questions about how to display messages that include gun emojis sent from others. Apple can let the symbol display, which means iOS 10 will allow users to read, but not write, emoji weapons. Alternatively, it can treat the gun as an unknown character and display the typical black box placeholder 'unknown' glyph. I think fine, although the latter makes a stronger statement on society.
