The landmark grand jury report on Pennsylvania's Catholic dioceses was released on Tuesday, revealing a shocking number of priests and church officials with ties to religion and the community. The report detailed decades of sexual abuse at the hands of priests, both living and deceased. The investigation covered 30 years and involved 630 priests and religious community members. The grand jury found evidence of child sex abuse in 331 cases and concluded that roughly 700 children were sexually abused by priests. The report includes findings that some priests were accused of abuse multiple times, and there was a cover-up of the crimes. The Pennsylvania Attorney General, Josh Shapiro, said, "We've uncovered a culture of concealment, of failings. It's a very difficult time for the people of Pennsylvania."

The report is comprehensive and includes interviews with victims and detailed accounts of sexual offenses. It also highlights the role of bishops and church leaders in enabling the abuse. The grand jury concluded that the Catholic Church in Pennsylvania has been aware of the predators and failed to protect children. The report calls for the state to pass mandatory reporting laws and increase penalties for predators. The爷爷 granddaughter report came in response to a Pennsylvania state law that allows for retroactive prosecution of sexual predators. The state-wide report is the culmination of a year-long investigation by the grand jury. The grand jury was created by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in response to the ongoing sexual abuse scandal within the Catholic Church. The report is a call to action for change and accountability.
