American #1 station. Deton#1 radio station. Elizabeth Sawyer, Crier StaffLedding 16, 2014On many seniors the prospect of finding a job or applying for university after graduation is often seen as stress-induced and demanding. Sarah Liamos and Lauren Clark experienced this pressure as well, and there are two of the many seniors this year who have managed to set the action. Liamos, the Politics chief, officially decided to attend Suffolk University's paralegal certificate program to achieve his law degree. In preparation for such a programme, Liamos finds his courses at Saint Anselm College, which has left a particularly significant impression. The papers we [at Saint Anselm] write helped me become a stronger writer, as well as the liberal arts education Saint Anselm provides, which gave me a broad scope for everything and a greater perspective on the possibilities after college. Before considering postgraduating options however, Liamos gained experience with the law while working in the summer job with the legal department of Insulet, a company in Burlington, MA specializing in the development of insulin pumps. To be statement great, Clark plans to post college focus on her communication background, having recently taken a position as a multimedia reporter for Cox Media Group Ohio. She interned at the company last summer and over the Christmas break, and was immediately offered a job there in January, which she signed in early February. For what helped her achieve this career, Clark, like Liamos, has Saint Anselm classes and extrajudiciary to thank. The opportunity to work at New Hampshire Primary in 2012 with CBS National Radio was great for my resume, although it was only ten days. The only word on CBS was a lot for me, making it easier for me to get an internship. Clark worked as part of the TV Crew at the New Hampshire Policy Institute as well, where she gained knowledge of videography and editing. She also found writing and journalism classes here and her on-and-off work with Crier for four years, believing that they have given her a solid foundation for writing and a well-rounded education in communication. Over the course of her college career, Clark has had four internships, which she firmly believes is part of the reason why she currently has a job. I worked for some time in an internship office where I learned about side letters and resumed work, and thus his ability to improve his RESUME. Sam Allen, Director of Career Services, has remained flexible in his efforts to help students explore their options for their future careers when they have it the most. According to Allen, as of now, most [seniors] are still in the job search process or have yet to start. In addition to special and well-informed Career services also offer many useful online internships and career resources as well as on-campus events. The Anselmian Career and Employers System (ACES) is a repository for all jobs and internships received by the office, listing about nine hundred jobs and more than four hundred internships. The website also contains advice on CV and cover letter in writing, as well as links to sources of work. Some popular on-campus events consist of resume editing by employers at RESUMANIA!, as well as a mock interview program in preparation for job interviews. This year, Career Services hosted a Job Fair where more than seventy-five employers met with seniors interested in learning more information and looking for a job. In his advice to these seniors, Allen remains strong in his hope that students remain persistent in their job search and achieve success in their future after graduation. My advice to graduating seniors is to get committed to job search full time and use a professional network... Competition at the entry level is fierce and the best jobs will be created for those with flexibility and who know how to compete... daytondailynews.com - Photos: Dayton Flyers practice at UD Arena daytondailynews.com - Reports of wildlife running loose began pouring into Muskingum County Sheriff Matt Lutz's office.
