Halloween movie night snack ideas

Take a trip down memory lane that you feel nostalgia AF Halloween is full of possibilities. It can be a terrifying and haunting occasion full of creepy costumes and shocking horrors. However, it can also be a holiday full of joy and joy where people young and old can dress up as their favorite characters and go treat-or-treat for delicious snacks and sweets. The popular but controversial holiday is celebrated all over the world. It's become such a huge occasion that Hollywood has had more than its share of movies depicting Halloween. While movies like Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban and John Carpenter's 1978 Halloween are some of the most beloved Halloween movies, many others don't even start doing the holiday justice. Here are the worst Halloween-themed movies of all time. 15. Trick or Treat Trick of Treat | The Laurentis Entertainment Group's Rotten Tomatoes score: 71% In 1986, someone thought it was wise to thrust Gene Simmons and Ozzy Osbourne into a Halloween movie, which resulted in the metal horror comedy, Trick or Treat. Family Ties' Marc Price plays a teenager obsessed with heavy metal. One day, the teenager decides to play his Sammi Curr record in the opposite direction, which is, of course, a terrible idea, and he accidentally unleashes a deadly curse. Soon the teenager realizes that there is more to life than just rock and roll. Unfortunately, Trick or Treat is far too complicated for a simple life lesson. Next: A movie with an evil witch and some gingerbread. 14. The Gingerdead Man The Gingerdead Man | Full Moon Entertainment Rotten Tomatoes score: 60% We need to give The Gingerdead Man some credit for his beautiful plot. The film follows a mad witch who revives her son from the dead. Unfortunately, her son happens to be a bad killer. She brings him back as a giant psychopathic gingerbread man whose sole focus is on killing the girl who had him executed. Besides the gruesome one-liners, we also can't get over the fact that the witch literally mixes her son's ashes in a gingerbread dough. It's frankly ridiculous. Next: A lackluster family Halloween movie. 13. Spooky Buddies Spooky Buddies | Disney Rotten Tomatoes score: 51% In the 90s and early 2000s we had family Halloween movies like Don't Look Under the Bed and Hocus Pocus. Generation Z can't even get that. 2011's Spooky Buddies apparently wanted parents to pull out their hair. The family movie follows a group of dogs called Buddies. Pip, Zelda, Rodney, and Skip, must stop Warwick the Warlock (Harland Williams) and save the world from his terrible antics. We love dogs just as much as the next person and the dogs in this movie are rather cute, but unless you literally have two Or younger, Spooky Buddies is just unbearable. For children growing up in the midst of ever-growing technologies, they may not be to deal with talking dogs whose lips don't even move. Next: A movie about a dog and a creepy neighbor 12. The dog that saved Halloween the dog that saved Halloween | Anchor Bay Entertainment Rotten Tomatoes score: 37% We thought we'd left AirBud back in the '90s, but apparently we were wrong. We're not sure why Hollywood despises kids so much, but if The Dog Who Saved Halloween is any indication, then they certainly don't hold kiddos in high regard. The film follows a talking dog (Joey Lawrence) who encounters a haunted house, a creepy neighbor (Lance Henriksen) and an angry dog (Mayim Bialik). The story is both dry and borderline sexist, and you're better off popping in an old VHS from Casper to suit your Halloween needs. Next: Possibly the worst clown movie ever. 11. The Clown Murders The Clown Murders | Trans Media Entertainment's Rotten Tomatoes score: 37% The Clown Murders started on the wrong foot by coming out the same year as John Carpenter's Halloween. The story also just smacks of misogyny. The film follows a group of friends who kidnap one of their ex-girlfriends who is married to a rich man. As one might expect, things get out of hand quickly. Even John Candy couldn't save this mess. Next: A movie that is really wacko 10. Wacko Wacko | Jensen Farley Pictures Rotten Tomatoes score: unavailable We all know that spoof movies are either genius or they are terrible. Unfortunately, there doesn't seem to be any in between. Before the Scary Movie franchise, director Greydon Clark decided to give us a Halloween parody movie called Wacko. The film follows high school students and a police officer (Joe Don Baker) who wait for Halloween and the so-called Lawn Mower Killer. The film may seem simple enough apart from the absurd notion of the lawn-mowing maniac, but that's as good as it gets. Mary, the main character of the film is still haunted 13 years after her sister's death. She seems to constantly have few law mowers anywhere which frankly are more hilarious than sad. They really could have picked a better weapon. Next: It's definitely not your mom's 'Halloween' 9. Halloween Night Halloween Night | The Asylum Rotten Tomatoes score: 17% The premise of Halloween Night is simple enough. It's about a crazy man who escapes from a madhouse and goes to his old family home. When he arrives, he discovers that there is a Halloween party in full swing. Unfortunately, the movie gets worse from there. Although it debuted in 2006, its special effects and cinematography are so badly done that it looks like something from the 70s. It's also pretty sad that the plot is a rip off of the entire Halloween franchise. Only this time instead of a terrifying Mike Myers, or even Ghostface, are we subjected A killer whose face looks more absurd than scary. It looks like melting. Next: A One parody horror movie. 8. Stan Helsing Anchor Bay Productions Rotten Tomatoes score: 17% Hollywood likes to cash in on a good thing which is why Stan Helsing happened. The film debuted in 2009 and revolves around a video store called Stan Helsing, his ex-girlfriend, best friend and an exotic dancer. The group ends up in a city cursed by the greatest monsters in movie history, including Freddy, Jason, Pinhead, Leatherface, Chucky and Michael Myers. Mostly the movie was just a waste with terrible jokes and plot points that fell flat. Next: A movie that tried to get all your favorite monsters together 7. The Pumpkin cart the pumpkin cart | First Look International Rotten Tomatoes score: 16% The Pumpkin Karver proves that jokes are always a bad idea. The film follows Alec (David J. Wright), who decides to dress up as a masked killer and scare his girlfriend, Lynn (Amy Weber). Unfortunately Lynn's brother takes the joke seriously and stabs Alec to death. A year later, the siblings are on the run from a known mass murderer. It's the same old story we've seen a hundred times before. Pumpkin heads aren't exactly terrifying either. Next: Nicolas Cage in a horror film 6. The Wicker Man The Wicker Man | Warner Bros. Rotten Tomatoes score: 15% In The Wicker Man, Nicolas Cage plays a detective who travels to a remote island to search for a missing girl. As soon as he arrives, he discovers that the inhabitants of the island have some truly sinister rituals and beliefs. The Wicker Man is a Halloween movie remake that should never have taken place that involved Cage dressing up as a bear and punching a nun. The best the movie can offer is some costume inspiration. Next: Another day, another pumpkin head. 5. Jack-O Jack-O | America Independent Productions Rotten Tomatoes score: 14% In 1995, Steve Latshaw gave us Jack-O and the Halloween movie genre never recovered. The premise of the film is not bad, after all, which does not like jack-o-lanterns. Unfortunately, it's only going to get worse from there. The plot follows a resurrected wizard with a pumpkin head (yes we are as confused as you are) who is awakened and seeks revenge for his death by hunting down the ancestors of his killer. In addition to the enigmatic plot, director Latshaw chose to star his son, Ryan Latshaw. Unfortunately, the teenager couldn't behave out of a paper bag. Jack-O is one of the most notorious horror films of all time. Next: The worst of the 'Halloween' franchise 4. Halloween: Resurrection Halloween Resurrection | Dimension Films Rotten Tomatoes score: 12% We love almost everything about the Halloween franchise, but 2002's Halloween Resurrection is just awful. The film is so dated that less than two decades it's laughable to watch. In the film, Laure Strobe (Jamie Lee Lee is pushed into the middle of a reality show. Someone thought it was a good idea to place contestants in Mike Myers' old house with cameras around them. Of course, on cue, the serial killer comes out of retirement to kill them all. There's even a scene with rapper Busta Rhymes kung-fu kicking Mike out of a window. It was terrible. Next: A movie full of Martians and robots 3. Spattered intruders | Touchstone Rotten Tomatoes score: 8% 1990's Spaced Invaders must have been interesting at least, but it couldn't even bother to live up to its plot. The story follows green Martians who land in Illinois on Halloween because they believe they are supposed to invade The Earth. That's where the interesting aspects of the story end. Instead, they befriend two people and use their space technology to fight a killer robot. There are a hundred better invasion movies than this. Next: A troll movement without troll 2. Troll 2 Movieirage Rotten Tomatoes score: 6% Troll 2 is a movie without a single troll, so that tells you how good it is. The film follows Joshua (Michael Stephenson) who doesn't want to go on vacation with his family to the town of Nibbog because he fears goblins are walking amuck in town. His parents, of course, ignore him until they encounter the evil creatures for themselves. Did we mention there are goblins, but no trolls? Nibbog is also spelled Goblin backwards. Next: A disgrace to Jim Carrey. 1. Son of mask son | New Line Cinema Rotten Tomatoes score: 6% There might be no other Halloween-themed movie or sequel worse than the cringe-worthy Son of the Mask. It's frankly a disgrace to Jim Carrey's incredible work and good name. The film follows Tim Avery (Jamie Kennedy), a cartoonist who leads a peaceful life with his family in suburbia. Things take a turn when the family dog discovers a mysterious mask. The movie is a disaster, Kennedy just isn't Carey's comic, and his antics in the mask are just disturbing and annoying. If you find it in your heart to still appreciate Halloween after this Halloween themed movie then you are a better person than we are. Follow Aramide Tinubu on Twitter @midnightami.
