Informed consent can be obtained in any situation where the trial's protocol may involve exposure to risk to the subjects. The implementation of any information provided, for example, the risks, benefits, and alternatives, should be clear and comprehensible to the subject. Therefore, the subject should have the option to withdraw from the study without prejudice.

Informed consent must be obtained from the subject or the subject's legal representative. The consent form should include a statement that the subject understands the risks and benefits of the study and agrees to participate.

The consent form should also include information about the study's purpose, design, and procedures. The subject should also be informed about the confidentiality of the information provided and the right to withdraw at any time without prejudice.

The consent form should be signed by the subject or the subject's legal representative. The signed consent form should be kept in the subject's medical record.

The informed consent process should be documented in the subject's medical record.
