Accept hits: Meaning 362Colors and The Swedish Flag consists of a yellow Scandinavian cross located on a blue background of the Swedish flag and starting on the left side of the flag. The design of the Swedish flag is similar to the Danish flag. The yellow and blue color was inspired by the Swedish Dynasty coat of ed, showing the three crown features on the blue background. As is used in other Scandinavian countries, the symbol of the cross shows Sweden's commitment to other Scandinavian countries. Map of the Swedish Flag The Swedish Flag Historic King Gustavus Adolphus II identified the first Swedish flag. The flag was a blue background with a double tail and a yellow cross on it. According to legend, the reason the cross is yellow is because during the Crusade of 1157, this flag appeared in the sky and landed on Swedish soil. On November 6, 1663, the King asked for a three-tailed flag with a new edict. So the cross on the flag was removed. Since 1814, Sweden and Norway have united under the same flag. Thus, norway's white and red flag was added to the upper left side of the Swedish flag. In June 1844, King Oscar I renewed the Flag of Sweden and Norway. This new flag of four triangles represented two states. Both counter-triangles represented a state. In the same year, the poem written by Richard Dybeck was accepted as sweden's national anthem. This anthem was later composed by Edvin Kallstenius. Inch In the late 19th century, some Norwegians were revised in the form of flags for their opposed to the Sweden-Norway Union. According to this arrangement, the Swedish flag was turned old with a yellow cross on the blue background. However, a symbol of unity has been added to the upper left side of the Swedish flag to represent the unity of the two states. In 1905, the Swedish-Norwegian unity ended and the Swedish flag was changed again, ending with a yellow cross over the blue color. Officially officially formalized on June 22, 1906, this flag continues to ripple over Sweden. Seeing it as a sign of God, he considered the yellow cross a banner against a blue background. It has also been suggested that the Swedish flag could be a flag of resistance against the Danish flag, which has been known since 1219 and is red with a white cross. According to this theory, the Swedish flag was created under King Charles Knutsson, who also introduced the Swedish coat of ly in 1442. The national coat of coat of law is divided into blue with the 1364 coat of 1364 th and King Magnus Birgersson's 1,275 coat of 1,275, with a quarterly golden cross pattée. Other historians say the Swedish flag was blue with a white cross before 1420, and was only cut blue with a golden cross during its first reign. Gustaf Vasa, King Guillaume Baviere/CC-BY 2.0 of Denmark in 1521 has a solid blue background with a yellow cross extending from top to bottom and left to right of the flag. While the yellow of the cross represents generosity, the blue background symbolizes loyalty, truth and justice. Various theories try to explain the source of the flag's colors. According to one theory, colors represent the coat of 1275 of King Magnus Birgersson or the coat of 1364 coat of law of King Albert of Mecklenburg. Sweden's royal coat of lys, which uses blue and gold, date back to 1442. The cross on the flag, which crosses the flag just to the left of the centre, reportedly came from Holy Eric, the former king of Sweden, who saw a golden cross in the sky. The most recognizable symbol of Christianity, the cross is used to express Sweden's religious history and the values of its first leaders. Previous forms of the Swedish flag also featured a blue background and yellow cross but with various shapes. Some were double-tailed, and follow-up versions featured a triple-tailed shape. The design of the flag is based on the Danish flag with the same cross, red and white. Some sources say the design inspiration is based on resistance to the Palestinian leadership. Rule.
