Salinger The Catcher in the Rye is established around the 1950s and narrated a boy named Holden Caulfield. Holden is general about his area while he informs the story, but he makes it clear that he is undergoing treatment in a psychiatric or mental institution. The events he recounts take place in the few days between the end of the autumn academic year and Xmas, when Holden is sixteen years old. Holden's story starts on Saturday in line with the completion of courses at Pencey prep school in Agerstown, Pennsylvania. Pencey is Holden's fourth institution. In fact, he has already let out three others. Catcher in the Rye Audiobook. On Pencey, he has omitted four from five of his classes and has also actually received notice that he is being deported, but he is not scheduled to return home to Manhattan until Wednesday. He visits his older background instructor, Spencer, to say goodbye, but when Spencer aims to rebuke him for his poor scholastic performance, Holden is going to get frustrated. Back in the dormitory, Holden is further annoyed by his unhygienic neighbor, Ackley, as well as by his own roommate, Stradlater. Stradlater spends the night on a day with Jane Gallagher, a woman whom Holden made use of to this day and whom he still appreciates. During the program of the night, Holden becomes considerably nervous about Stradlater's taking Jane out, when Stradlater returns, Holden queries him insistently about whether he intended to make love to her. Stradlater teases Holden, who flies into a craze and assaults Stradlater. Stradlater pins Holden down and bloodies his nose. Holden makes a decision that he has had enough of Pencey and also will definitely go to Manhattan 3 days early, stay in a hotel, as well as not tell his moms and dads that he's back. On the train to New York City, Holden meets the mother of one of his fellow Pencey students. Although he believes this student is a full bastard, he informs the woman fabricated stories about how reluctant her child is as well as how well valued he is going to college. When he reaches Penn Terminal, he steps into a phone booth as well as considers calling a number of people, however, for many factors he chooses versus that. He gets in a taxi and also asks the taxi driver where the ducks in Central Park go when shallows are up, but his concern annoys the motorist. Holden has the taxi driver take him to the Edmont Hotel, where he inspects himself in. From its area at Edmont, Holden could see into the areas with a couple of the guests on the opposite wing. He observes a guy placing on silk stockings, high heels, a bra, an upper, and also an evening dress. He also sees a man and a woman in yet another area take turns spitting mouthfuls of their drinks right into each other's faces and also chuckling hysterically. He interprets the couple's behaviour a form of sexual play and also is both upset and also aroused by it. After smoking a few cigarettes, he calls Belief Cavendish, a woman he has never met but whose number he received from a colleague at Princeton. Holden thinks he keeps in mind to hear that she exploited to be a pole dancer, and he thinks he can persuade her to have sex with him. He calls her, and though she goes to first frustrated at being called on such a late mr by a totally unknown person, she eventually suggests that they meet the following day. Holden doesn't want to wait that long and ends up hanging up without organizing a meeting. Holden goes downstairs to the lavender area and sits at a table, but the steward realizes he is underage and refuses to serve him. He flirts with three ladies in their thirties who seem like they're from out of society as well as are mostly curious to catch a glimpse of a celebrity. After making some quips about his age, they leave so he can pay their entire tab. As Holden walks out to the entrance hall, he starts to think of Jane Gallagher and, in a flashback, states how he was familiar with her. They met while investing a summer vacation in Maine, played golf and checkers, and also kept hands on the movies. One afternoon, during a video game of checkers, her stepfather came onto the patio where they played as he left Jane began to cave. Holden had moved to rest next to her and also kissed her around her face, but she would not allow him to kiss her on the mouth. It was the closest they came to necking. Holden leaves Edmont and takes a taxi to Ernie's jazz club in Greenwich Village. Once again he asks the taxi driver where the ducks in Central Park go in winter, and this taxi driver is much more irritable compared to the very first. Holden sits alone at a table in Ernie's and also observes the other customers with disgust. He meets Lillian Simmons, one of his older brother's former girlfriends, who welcomes him to sit with her as well as her date. Maurice, the elevator driver at Edmont, makes sure to send a woman on the street to Holden's place for $5, and Holden agrees. A girl who identifies herself as Sunny arrives at his door. She controls her dress, but Holden really starts to feel peculiar and also tries to make conversation with her. He claims he eventually went through a back operation and also isn't completely recovered to make love to her, but he gives to pay her anyway. She sits on her lap and also talks dirty to him, but he insists on paying her five bucks as well as showing her the door. Sunny with Maurice, which requires an extra $5 from Holden. When Holden chooses not to pay, Maurice punches him in the stomach and leaves him on the floor while Sunny takes five bucks from his budget. Holden's going to bed. Sleep.
