Buying on BN.com Jane Eyre is a young orphan, brought up by Mrs. Reed, her cruel, rich aunt. A servant named Bessie provides Jane with some of the few kindnesss she receives by telling her her stories and singing songs for her. Once, as punishment for a fight with his cousin John Reed, Aunt Jane put Jane in the red room, the room in which Uncle Jane Reed died. While locked up, Jane, believing she sees her uncle's ghost, screams and faints. She wakes up to find herself in the care of Bessie and is courtesy of the pharmacist Mr. Lloyd, who invites Mrs. Reed to have Jane be sent to school. To Jane's delight, Mrs. Reed agrees. Once at the school Lowood, Jane discovers that her life is far from idyllic. The headmaster is Mr. Brocklehurst, a violent, hypocritical and violent man. Brocklehurst preaches the doctrine of poverty and deprivation to his students, using the school's funds to provide a rich and luxurious lifestyle for his family. In Lowood, Jane befriends a young girl named Helen Burns, whose strong, martyrdom attitude to school's suffering is helpful and dislikes Jane. A massive typhoid epidemic sweeps Lowood, and Helen dies of consumption. The epidemic also leads to Mr. Brocklehurst's departure, drawing attention to the denials in Lowood. Once a group of more sympathetic gentlemen takes Brocklehurst's place, Jane's life improves considerably. She spends another eight years in Lowood, six as a student and two as a teacher. After training for two years, Jane craves new experiences. She takes the position of governess in an estate called Thornfield, where she teaches a lively French girl named Adale. Mrs Fairfax's esteemed housekeeper presides over the estate. Jane's employer in Thornfield - a dark, passionate man named Rochester, in which Jane secretly falls in love. One night, she saved Rochester from a fire that he said was started by a drunken servant named Grace Poole. But as Grace Poole continues to work in Thornfield, Jane concludes that she was not told the whole story. Jane is immersed in despondency when Rochester brings home a beautiful but vicious woman named Blanche Ingram. Jane expects Rochester to propose blanche. But Rochester instead makes an offer to Jane, who accepts almost unbeliever. The wedding day comes, and as Jane and Mr. Rochester prepare to exchange vows, Mr. Mason's voice shouts that Rochester already has a wife. Mason presents himself as the brother of this wife - a woman named Bertha. Mr. Mason testifies that Bertha, whom Rochester married when he was a young man in Jamaica, is still alive. Rochester does not deny Mason's claims, but he explains that Bertha has gone mad. He takes the wedding back to Thornfield, where they witness the insane Bertha Mason around on fours and growling like an animal. Rochester keeps Bertha hidden in Thornfield's third story and pays Grace Poole to keep his wife in check. Bertha was the real cause of the mysterious fire at the beginning of the story. Knowing that she can't be with Rochester, Jane runs away from Thornfield. Pennyless and hungry, Jane is forced to sleep outdoors and ask for food. Finally, the three siblings who live in a manor alternatively called Marsh End and Moore House take her in. Their names are Mary, Diana and St. John (pronounced As Sinjin) Rivers, and Jane quickly befriended them. St. John is a priest and he finds Jane teaching work at a charity school in Morton. One day he surprised her by claiming that her uncle, John Eyre, had died and left her with a large fortune: 20,000 pounds. When Jane asks how he got the news, he shocks her further, saying that her uncle was also his uncle. Jane and Riverses are cousins. Jane immediately decides to share her inheritance on a par with her three newfound relatives. St. John decides to go to India as a missionary, and he calls Jane to accompany him as his wife. Jane agrees to go to India, but refuses to marry her cousin because she does not love him. St. John presses her to reconsider her decision, and she almost gives up. However, she realizes that she can't give up forever the man she really loves when one night she hears Rochester's voice calling her name over the swamps. Jane immediately rushes back to Thornfield and discovers that she was burned to the ground by Bertha Mason, who died in the fire. Rochester saved the servants, but lost his sight and one of his hands. Jane goes to the new residence of Rochester, Ferndin, where he lives with two servants named John and Mary. In Ferndina, Rochester and Jane reconnect and soon get married. At the end of her story, Jane writes that she has been married for ten blissful years, and that she and Rochester are enjoying perfect equality in their life together. She says that after two years of blindness, Rochester regained sight in one eye and was able to contemplate his first son at his birth. Jane Eyre, the daughter of a priest becomes an orphan at a young age and adopts her maternal uncle, who dies while leaving Jane at the mercy of his abusive wife, who becomes extremely harsh towards her. Jane's cousins, as well as the maids of this house, tortured her and beat her. She is often reminded that she depends on them. Tired of her, Ms. Reeds sends her to a charity school called Lowood School, where she meets the same fate as the headmaster of that school, namely Mr. Brocklehurst is cruel as well as stingy. However, the teacher, namely Miss Temple, is sympathetic to her. Jane friendship with Helen Burns, whose religious devotion, simplicity and piety attract her. Once Jane Jane to be a liar as well as a deceitful person on the part of the director and thus get depressed. However, she later dropped all charges against Miss Temple. At Lowood School, Tifus erupts in the death of a number of schoolgirls, including Helen Burns, who though dies of consumption, not. Jane remains a student for eight years and then teaches at the same school for two years. After that, she decides to change jobs. Bessie, the maid of Reed's family visits her and tells her that John Reeds (Jane's cousin) has become a big disappointment for Mrs. Reeds. Her cousin Georgiana tried to escape with her lover. However, her plan was discovered by her sister Eliza, who prevented her from fleeing. At Thornfield Hall, Jane Eyre gets a job as a governess for a young French girl, namely Adele at Thornfield Hall. There she feels quite comfortable and often goes out on the roof and looks into the sky. She often hears an unusual laugh in the top floor of Thornfield House, which bothers her. One day, while she is walking, a man falls from a horse, and Jane helps him get up. Jane comes back and finds the same person there. She thus met Mr. Rochester, a 38-year-old man who owns Thornfield Hall. Over time, Jane and Rochester become good friends. Jane tells him about his past life, as does Rochester. One night the Rochester bed was set on fire by unknown assailants. However, Jane saves him. She suspects that Grace Poole, the maid at Thornfield Hall, might have done it. Jane secretly falls in love with Rochester. She told Mrs Fairfax (in charge of the mansion) that Rochester could marry a beautiful and rich girl, namely Miss Blanche Ingram. This information torments Jane and she decides to leave her job to avoid the grief of losing her love. Rochester, who came out without telling anyone returns a few days later with a group of his friends who stay there for two weeks. One day a man, namely Mason visits Thornfield Hall and at night he attacked a lady who is unknown to Jane. He gets severe wounds from her fatal attacks and thus the surgeon is called in to treat him. Jane tries to learn about a mysterious lady living on the third floor of the same house, but Rochester scares her away. Jane visits Mrs. Reeds, who is on her deathbed. She tells Jane that her uncle, a certain John Eyre, wanted to meet Jane, but she didn't like him being able to meet her. Mrs. Reeds dies, not regretting her past actions. Jane returns back to Thornfield House and Rochester, who also fell in love with Jane offers her for marriage. Jane readily accepts that. During the marriage, a man namely Mr. Briggs arrives at the Church reveals that Rochester is already married to his sister Bertha. Rochester tells Jane and everyone else how his family married him to Bertha. She's a mysterious, mysterious. living on the top floor. Jane's trust in Rochester is destroyed, and despite his entreaties, she leaves without referring to fate. Reconciliation with her cousins After roaming during the day and being very hungry, she falls on the door of the farm house that belonged to the priest, namely St. John Rivers. He lived there with his sisters Diana and Murray. They let Jane live with them. Jane starts working as a teacher at a school for girls, and also gets to file live in. She learns that a beautiful lady, namely Rosamond is in love with John Rivers, however, the latter does not want to marry her because he wants to go to India as a missionary and finds Rosamond unfit for travel. John's marriage proposal to John begins to offer Jane for marriage, but gets rejected every time. While she's there, the good news comes to her, making her quite happy. First, she learns that her uncle John Eyre has died and left twenty thousand pounds for her. The second Rivers turns out to be her cousins. She divides her fortune equally between the four and thus each of them receives five thousand pounds. John Rivers never stops offering her and Jane is finally getting ready to accept it. However, one night she hears as if Rochester had called him: Jane! Jane! Jane! Returning to Rochester the next day, she leaves for Thornfield Hall and, having reached there, finds him in ruins. She learns that Bertha, the wife of Rochester, set fire to the house and committed suicide. Rochester tried to save her and became blind as well as crippled. Jane Eyre goes to the estate in the woods, where now lives Rochester. They're both getting married. Rochester partially recovers and also receives vision in one of his eyes. Both live happily after this and also have children. Read about feminism in Jane Eyre. Download the English Summary App or check out our dictionary.
