Knowledgebase Home English NNN NANDA-I NIC NOC for Safe Patient Care Volume 6, Issue 2 First published: 04 March 2019 Information Funding: This study was done in accordance with a master's thesis at the Tehran University of Medical Sciences (TUMS) and has not received any specific grant from any other funding agency in the public, commercial or non-commercial sectors. To assess the impact of NANDA-I training in nursing diagnostics, the classification of nurse intervention and the classification of nursing outcomes (NNN system), on patient safety in psychiatric wards. In the randomized controlled trial, 80 nurses were randomly selected and divided into two, control and experimental groups. Nurses documented reports, analysed and analysed in terms of the use of the INN system. The intervention of the study was the preparation of the NNN system, based on the recognition of signs, symptoms and etiology of important phenomena in psychiatric wards. The control group used the NNN (N No. 34) system, both before and after the intervention, while the use of the experimental group increased from (N No. 26)-(N No. 434). Thus, the training of the NNN system can improve patient care related to patient safety in psychiatric wards.
