Professors generally don't ask anything from a form of self-esteem. But if they learn some emergency food in your form, they may ask you about these topics. And if you don't know these topics properly, you'll have a better chance of not getting selected for scholarships. So, don't write anything that you're not sure about. If I remember correctly, in form they ask: What is your favorite subject?, and I mentioned biology there. The interview team leader saw this and asked me about my favorite field of biology. When I told the genetics, the two professors started asking questions from genetics and didn't ask anything of any other areas at all (except for exactly 2 chemistry questions, as I mentioned chemistry as my second favorite subject). But they didn't check other responses in the form of self-esteem (at least in my presence). Do mention of scientific camps if you took part in any. Again, don't lie. All the best for the interview round. :) No need to fill out the form again, it's not even a mistake. Stay calm and get ready for the exam. All the best!!
