The European release was May 7, 2008. This was followed by the sequel, The Sims 2: Cats and Dogs, released on October 22, 2008, and the spin-off, The Sims 2: BeachFront Paradise, released on August 27, 2009. This game is the first Sims game in which the players do not have a town, but an island, which is where the game takes place. Contents Gameplay Like The Sims: Livin' Large, this game differs from The Sims 2: University in several ways: The player can control more than one sim at once.

There is a beach, which can be used for swimming and other recreational activities. There is a lagoon, which can be used for swimming and other recreational activities. There are various beaches, a lagoon, and a forest where the player can explore. As with the previous console versions of The Sims 2, the player cannot purchase a home, and must rent one instead. Unlike the previous console versions of The Sims 2, there are no apartments and no starter home. Instead, the player must purchase two different types of houses at two different locations on the island and pay rent to the landowner. There are three types of houses.

Tennis courts can be rented for the amount of the rent, the players have in their town. The first house can be rented for the amount of rent the player has in their town. The second house can be rented for the amount of rent the player has in their town. The third house can be rented for the amount of rent the player has in their town. Since The Sims 2: Castaway takes place on an island, the players' town is referred to as the Island, where the players can collect produce and customize their town. When players want to customize their town, they must complete a series of tasks. The player may collect produce and order household items at the Island's produce and household item vendor. Players may move items to the Island's storage. Players may move the Island's structure to their Town's structure and keep it at their Town. Players may sell items at the Island's structure. Players may give items as gifts to other Sims. There are seven types of furniture for players to purchase from the Island's structure. Players may earn money by completing tasks. Before the game, the player may build 520fdb1ae7
