So are you saying that every person who downloads a rom-mod is potentially spied on by the FBI? If so, I would have to say that your title is 100% wrong. I don't download roms for Nintendo systems. I do it for the same reason that everyone else downloads rom-mods, because I like to play with my systems, and if I can mod my system to be better, that's just great. It's absolutely ridiculous. I can't even tell you how many times I've said something like, "Oh I wish I could just get my money back on this." Just from downloading a rom-mod, they don't get you back your money, because there's no way to get your money back. If you're doing anything that's illegal, I can't really comment on it. But I don't believe that anyone who downloads a rom-mod is going to be spied on by the FBI. And that's not even taking into consideration the fact that Nintendo is pretty tight lipped about their systems, and the games that have been released for those systems. there's a lot of commercial sites, such as youtube, with even more copyrighted material that Nintendo can't even access, then you can go all over the internet and download stuff you don't want. Click to expand... Uhh, that's like downloading a rom-mod and saying "you didn't have permission to download that mod". I mean sure, you can't get your money back for it. But as far as copyright infringement and potential theft is concerned, I'm sure no one would argue that it's theft, as you're not putting anything but just getting what you want. There's a difference between getting what you want and being a horrible, horrible person, who is stealing stuff. I'm not saying that you're a horrible person, I just have to say that the downloader is getting what they want. Which is just a ROM-MOD, which is already a copyrighted thing. The difference is that a lot of people have been getting ROM-MODs for a long time, but people are still being heard for downloading copyrighted stuff in a relatively new and recent phenomenon. I don't mean to belittle the issue of piracy at all. I'm just saying that there's a lot of copyright infringement that goes on, that people don't even know that is going on. And then 520fdb1ae7
