FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Bushnell Mueller Statement on the Crisis in Ukraine.

Washington, DC / Brussels. March 9th, 2022.

Bushnell Mueller condemns the unjustified attack on Ukraine and stands in solidarity with the people of Ukraine – and their call to stand for democracy and self-determination around the world. We also urge sympathy for those within Russia who do not have access to essential freedoms or free press, cannot safely oppose their government’s policy, and will also suffer from this senseless violence.

In a moment of such tragedy, we take heart in the acts of kindness – from concerned global citizens, relief organizations, neighboring countries and so many more.

As advisors for corporate social responsibility, we applaud the decision of so many companies to see this crisis for what it means to our collective future and take a stand for what’s right.

Given our own work, we feel obligated to make a few cautionary observations. Clean energy and energy security are inextricably linked. Mounting environmental crises and their impact on human health, nutrition, security, and prosperity will not be localized – they too will challenge borders, challenge global security, and confront our global conscience and interconnected economies.

Finally, we are reminded that when people, governments and business find their collective voice and the will to act in the face of such challenges, there is cause for hope. Just days before this crisis unfolded, the Munich Security Conference closed with an important warning: “Sensing that they have no control over global events, many people seem to conclude that it will not be possible to solve humanity’s most challenging problems. This poses the risk that, even though there are resources, strategies, and instruments available to address the key challenges facing humanity, the world will not be able to do so.” Now in the case of Ukraine, and for all the shared challenges that lie ahead, we call for the global community to act with confidence and unity.
