She turned the key and it would crank but not start. My son and I did normal things. Check if the fuel pump has been switched on. We hit the tank, maybe blow start the pump and it doesn't work. We also used a bit of starting fluid to try to kick start it and it didn't work. So we nailed it to the fuel pump. About 30 minutes later my father-n-law came up and we did the same (I don't know why, but he felt we didn't do it enough). Shortly before we gave up (after being frustrated about it all) he sprayed the starter fluid into the intake. He cranked one many times and he back shot all over me. Right there I stopped working. So we said it was a fuel pump and we did. We got a new fuel pump and I installed it. As I was taking things apart and disabling things I found the issue. The fork under the driver's back seat was corroded and one of the prongs was burned. I cleaned it up the best I could think maybe that would work. No start. So I started looking at the fuses and relays, everything looked good. I hooked up the reader's code and it showed no codes, but, it still poked around to start. A friend suggested that there might be a power switch, thinking the rear fire had tripped it up. So, after this long history my question is: where is the fuel switch? How to replace the plug next to the bulkhead? In case it's a problem. Thank you for your help. 2 0 1 Buick Property Rendezvous You still have a maintenance guide???? Do you also post links to copyrighted digital music downloads? For those who want to buy a guide, you can get it here for $135 plus shipping. We do not condone illegal activities in this community.
