A collection of useful resources for the global baseball team. Registration Login's devastated parents, Greg and Lisa Manning, said a toxicology report found he had taken a toxic mixture of heroin and fentanyl, a synthetic opioid so potent that it is often fatal. The amount of fentanyl in his body was equivalent to three grains of salt. That's all it took to kill the 180-pound guy, said Greg Manning.Dustin died Friday, May 26, in Lawrenceville, a suburb on the outskirts of Atlanta.At 6:09 a.m., paramedics were called to the house with reports of an unresponsive teenager. Dustin was dead. I told him I'd pick him up early for work, and I went over about 5:45 to wake him up, and when I opened the door, he looked like he was lying his shoes. Very quickly I realized grabbed him and he was cold, said Greg Manning.Lisa Manning was at the gym when she got a call from her husband. He said, Oh my God, my God, call 911. I didn't ask any questions. I knew that. Less than an hour later, at 6:53 a.m., another phone call was made at 911.Half a mile down the road, 18-year-old Joseph Abraham was found slumped to the floor by his parents, Dave and Katie Abraham. He didn't have a pulse. I started screaming and screaming and screaming, Joe, Joe - wake up, man! And then I realized that something was really wrong, said Dave Abraham. As soon as I saw it, I knew and I just ran and I just started to hold it and I can say it was cold, said Katie Abraham. Dave was on the phone with 911, and I said, It's too late. We can't fix it, she said, as she wiped out tears in her eyes. Childhood friendsDaffin Manning and Joseph Abraham were childhood friends. They played in the same Little League team. Joseph's father coached them for two years. But in high school, both began to dabble in drugs. The Abrahams believe their son had his first dose of opioids removed when his wisdom teeth were removed. He was drugged again when he broke his ankle and later his hand playing sports. When you are given a prescription from a doctor, we often just believe it, said Katie Abraham. She believes that Joseph turned to drugs after dealing with two major tragedies at a young age. He lost two of his really good friends in eighth grade - one because of cancer and one from drowning. He really had a hard time. He struggled with it, she said. At the age of 12, Dustin told his parents he was depressed. Soon he started drinking beer and taking drugs. He told us the drugs that gave him an outlet and made him feel good, Lisa Manning said. Both parents sought help in treatment centers not once, but again and again. Lisa Manning even started working at one of the centers to keep an eye on her son and better understand addiction. But Dave Abraham says that it wasn't enough to fight my son's battle. Once they take (opioids), there is a switch in their brain It gets flipped - and to get that turned upside down can take up to five years and most procedures are less than they're back,' he said. According to both parents, Dustin and Joe have not been in touch in recent years, but it appears they may have bought the drug that killed them from the same dealer. According to police, some of the pills were almost identical. There were fears in the community that other children may have bought the same drugs. Lost potential as parents began to gain an idea of the world of opioid addiction, they realized that getting the drug quickly and easily. Like most parents, they had high hopes for their beloved sons and their great potential. Walking through her son's bedroom, Lisa Manning pointed to the U.S. flag on the wall. This flag was a symbolic thing for him. He always wanted to go to the service. He always wanted to be a Marine. He would have made a great Marine, she said, breathing a deep sigh. Joe was a sensitive young man, he was funny, he had a big heart, - recalls Katie Abraham. He loved to fish, he loved being outside and hiking. He could do whatever he wanted. He was very smart, in advanced classes. Dave Abraham added: 'He could watch videos on YouTube and go and play the piano. ... Most fathers teach their children how to fish. Joe taught me how to fish. The community in shockHopes for the future of their children were broken in an instant . It happened in 18 houses of each other with two young people on the same morning. The community was in complete shock, said Kathi Abraham.The parents are now attending a support group for people who have lost children from opioids. And in a sign of the times, the support group grows in size every month. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention expects drug overdose deaths to rise to 64,000 in 2016, when the numbers are completed. Most of these overdoses are related to opioids. Fentanyl, which is 50-100 times more potent than morphine, has been developed to treat chronic pain. A small amount can be fatal. The number of people killed by fentanyl has risen from 3,000 to more than 20,000 in just three years, a 540% increase. President Trump has declared opioid addiction a public health emergency that officials say will allow the federal government to waive some of the rules and give states more flexibility in how they use federal funds. It does not provide any additional funding to deal with the crisis. Like many critics, the Manning and Abraham families say it doesn't go far enough. It's just a step, a little step, Greg Manning said. The problem with treatment right now is there is a very low success rate. The longer they stay in treatment, that success goes up, said Abraham.They also want tougher penalties for dealers. These drugs are killing people and there are a lot of drug dealers around, said Katie Abraham. For me, it's poison or Anyone who sells fentanyl should have a life sentence, her husband added. These parents believe that prevention is key, and education should begin as early as the fifth grade. They began to disseminate information in their community in the hope that it would save another family from the suffering of losing a child. As they tried to hold back the tears, Lisa Manning and Katie Abraham admitted that their lives had changed forever. You're changing. You'll never be the same. I'll never be what I was. It's like a knife deep in your heart,' said Lisa Manning. We wanted to have two children because we wanted them to be with each other, said Katie Abraham, crying. Now (our son) Matthew is an only child. Correction: This story has been updated to clarify that deaths from drug overdoses, not opioid overdose deaths alone, are expected to top 64,000 in 2016. I didn't ask any questions. I knew that. Less than an hour later, at 6:53 a.m., another phone call was made at 911.Half a mile down the road, 18-year-old Joseph Abraham was found slumped to the floor by his parents, Dave and Katie Abraham. He didn't have a pulse. I started screaming and screaming and screaming, Joe, Joe - wake up, man! And then I realized that something was really wrong, said Dave Abraham. As soon as I saw it, I knew and I just ran and I just started to hold it and I can say it was cold, said Katie Abraham. Dave was on the phone with 911, and I said, It's too late. We can't fix it, she said, as she wiped out tears in her eyes. Childhood friendsDaffin Manning and Joseph Abraham were childhood friends. They played in the same Little League team. Joseph's father coached them for two years. But in high school, both began to dabble in drugs. The Abrahams believe their son had his first dose of opioids removed when his wisdom teeth were removed. He was drugged again when he broke his ankle and later his hand playing sports. When you are given a prescription from a doctor, we often just believe it, said Katie Abraham. She believes that Joseph turned to drugs after dealing with two major tragedies at a young age. He lost two of his really good friends in eighth grade - one because of cancer and one from drowning. He really had a hard time. He struggled with it, she said. At the age of 12, Dustin told his parents he was depressed. Soon he started drinking beer and taking drugs. He told us the drugs that gave him an outlet and made him feel good, Lisa Manning said. Both parents sought help in treatment centers not once, but again and again. Lisa Manning even started working at one of the centers to keep an eye on her son and better understand addiction. But Dave Abraham says that it wasn't enough to fight my son's battle. Once they take (opioids), there is a switch in their brain It gets flipped - and to get that turned upside down can take up to five years and most procedures are less than they're back,' he said. According to both parents, Dustin and Joe have not been in touch in recent years, but it appears they may have bought the drug that killed them from the same dealer. According to police, some of the pills were almost identical. There were fears in the community that other children may have bought the same drugs. Lost potential as parents began to gain an idea of the world of opioid addiction, they realized that getting the drug quickly and easily. Like most parents, they had high hopes for their beloved sons and their great potential. Walking through her son's bedroom, Lisa Manning pointed to the U.S. flag on the wall. This flag was a symbolic thing for him. He always wanted to go to the service. He always wanted to be a Marine. He would have made a great Marine, she said, breathing a deep sigh. Joe was a sensitive young man, he was funny, he had a big heart, - recalls Katie Abraham. He loved to fish, he loved being outside and hiking. He could do whatever he wanted. He was very smart, in advanced classes. Dave Abraham added: 'He could watch videos on YouTube and go and play the piano. ... Most fathers teach their children how to fish. Joe taught me how to fish. The community in shockHopes for the future of their children were broken in an instant . It happened in 18 houses of each other with two young people on the same morning. The community was in complete shock, said Kathi Abraham.The parents are now attending a support group for people who have lost children from opioids. And in a sign of the times, the support group grows in size every month. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention expects drug overdose deaths to rise to 64,000 in 2016, when the numbers are completed. Most of these overdoses are related to opioids. Fentanyl, which is 50-100 times more potent than morphine, has been developed to treat chronic pain. A small amount can be fatal. The number of people killed by fentanyl has risen from 3,000 to more than 20,000 in just three years, a 540% increase. President Trump has declared opioid addiction a public health emergency that officials say will allow the federal government to waive some of the rules and give states more flexibility in how they use federal funds. It does not provide any additional funding to deal with the crisis. Like many critics, the Manning and Abraham families say it doesn't go far enough. It's just a step, a little step, Greg Manning said. The problem with treatment right now is there is a very low success rate. The longer they stay in treatment, that success goes up, said Abraham.They also want tougher penalties for dealers. These drugs are killing people and there are a lot of drug dealers around, said Katie Abraham. For me, it's poison or Anyone who sells fentanyl should have a life sentence, her husband added. These parents believe that prevention is key, and education should begin as early as the fifth grade. They began to disseminate information in their community in the hope that it would save another family from the suffering of losing a child. As they tried to hold back the tears, Lisa Manning and Katie Abraham admitted that their lives had changed forever. You're changing. You'll never be the same. I'll never be what I was. It's like a knife deep in your heart,' said Lisa Manning. We wanted to have two children because we wanted them to be with each other, said Katie Abraham, crying. Now (our son) Matthew is an only child. Correction: This story has been updated to clarify that deaths from drug overdoses, not opioid overdose deaths alone, are expected to top 64,000 in 2016.
